GREAT SALT LAKE SUBJECT OF STUDY

GEOLOGICAL SURVEY GIVING NOTED LAKE A RIGID EXAMINATION

The present behavior and past history of Great Salt Lake is now the object of a special investigation by the United States geological survey. The United States weather bureau precipitation records, beginning in 1863, present a comparatively accurate record of the levels of Great Salt Lake dating back to the year 1850. In 1850 the lake stood at 3 feet. In 1868 the water rose to 14 feet, dropped to 7.5 feet in 1873, and rose again to 14 feet in 1877. The lake then gradually lowered until the water stood at 2.4 feet in 1902 and 2.2 feet in 1905. Since 1905 the water has gradually risen, reaching the 6-foot mark in May, 1910. The lake is now falling.

Many millions of dollars have been spent in the construction of railroads and resorts over or near the shores of Great Salt Lake. If any data can be secured which will enable one to make a reliable prediction as to the behavior of the lake ten years in advance, the information would be of inestimable value. It will be necessary to determine whether or not there are regular periods of wet and dry years; also to determine the time intervening between two wet and two dry periods. To determine this point one should have precipitation records dating back 100 years or more.

Taking, for example, a forest tree which is some distance from a flowing stream, and one which receives no moisture from artificial sources, it is believed that the annual growth of this tree would bear a direct relation to the amount of precipitation which fell during the winter just prior to the growing season. The amount of growth made during each year may be determined by measuring the thickness of the tree's annual rings. The temperature during the growing season would have its effect upon the growth of the tree, and it is therefore not expected that the data obtained from measuring the thickness of annual rings would give reliable records for successive years where there is little variation in the annual precipitation. It seems reasonable to believe that the high, normal and low years can be determined. The forest service has extended its assistance in this interesting investigation by cutting a big tree from the Big Cottonwood drainage area, which lies about ten miles southeast of Salt Lake City. This tree is between 400 and 500 years old. A section will be cut and polished in order that the thickness of the annual rings may be easily measured. A thorough study will be made of the first sixty annual rings and a comparison made with the sixty-year record of the levels of Great Salt Lake. If a definite relation can be determined showing that a certain amount of precipitation produces a ring of certain thickness, this relation can then be applied back to the center of the tree and an estimate thereby secured for the annual precipitation for a period of 400 to 500 years. An effort will be made to complete this study during the next three months.

BUSY DAYS AT THE GIROUX

HEAVY MACHINERY BEING LOW- ERED TO THE 1200-FOOT STATION

Things have been going ahead with a rush at the Giroux Consolidated during the past week, and there is a marked advance in all the work in progress in and about the mine, says the White Pine News. During the week they have been lowering the big pump to the 1200-foot station, and this has been no little task. Some of the parts weigh as much as seven tons, and after being lowered piecemeal the pumps must be re-assembled, and the fittings, all of which are on the ground, put in position. This will take several weeks yet, but the hardest part of the work is over.

The assembling of the pump parts will be done by the men of the Giroux Consolidated, and at the conclusion of the work will be inspected by the people from the east. From this on, big things are ahead for the mine, for it will not be long after the installation of the two pumps when sinking will be resumed to the 1400-foot level, where another pump with a capacity of 600 gallons a minute will be installed. This will give the mine a capacity of lifting, in all, 2400 gallons a minute, one of the pumps at the 1200 level having a capacity of 1200 gallons a minute and the other, 600.

The steel head frame, 75 feet in height, is up on its foundation over the five-compartment shaft, and is nearly completed, the men being now engaged in riveting. The change from the wooden frame to the new one will be made without interrupting the work of the shaft.

The permanent hoisting plant is now entirely in frame, the boilers are in position and are being bricked in. The foundations for the engines have been completed, and the engines will be installed as soon as the concrete settles. They have been rushing things with a vengeance on this property, and still no word comes with regard to the construction of the concentrator.
